Category depth is obvious.

The buying route is not.

Yardstick has a specialist team, recurring content, project services and visible authority. The public offer still reads as a menu for the whole advice profession.

FOUNDER DECISION

Check whether existing deal records show a pattern of single-service versus multi-service purchases before deciding this is a real constraint.

Own the moments when an advice firm has to change.

CHANGE-POINT DEMAND × DIAGNOSIS × SERVICE SEQUENCE × RETAINED PROOF

A measurable growth relationship — not a financial forecast.

Replace every term with first-party baselines; test the sequence; scale only what improves durable customer value.

Four levers. One order of operations.

01	NAME	Define the firm change points where specialist help becomes urgent.
02	DIAGNOSE	Turn broad interest into a specific commercial problem.
03	ROUTE	Sequence the right services instead of presenting a menu.
04	RETAIN	Use recurring content as evidence of momentum and value.

Established advice firms at a change point

A best-fit hypothesis: firms facing succession, capacity, digital or client-selection decisions — not a confirmed pipeline segment.

EVIDENCE REQUIRED

Test the hypothesis against enquiry reasons, win rate, service sequence and account value.

LEAD WITH DIAGNOSIS.

Reorganise the public offer around named change points and make a diagnostic the primary entry mechanism before wider messaging or campaign work.

THE TRADE-OFF

A change-point narrative may read as less relevant to newer or smaller firms currently served by the Made Simple offer, so Yardstick must decide whether to run both propositions in parallel or fully reposition.
